Theology 105 HW 3

Where the enemy creates wounds pt.2

I have received healing and freedom from rejection. I was born without a father and to a family in which my grandfather also left us. Growing up until my mother met my stepdad which I consider my dad, it was only me, my mother, grandmother, and uncle. As I grew up I also suffered rejection from every single relationship I was in. The guy would either treat me badly, cheat on me, or both. I also rejected myself. I did not believe any human person other than my mother or father could truly love me. I felt worthless, ugly, and unwanted. Thankfully, I was able to give all of those lies to God and ask Him to take away the rejection I had felt since childhood. I was finally able to accept and love myself as well as forgive others for the actions they have committed which led to me feeling rejected. I was able to find my identity in Christ and now walk in freedom as well as help others walk into their freedom as well.
